PROFILE

My background is equipped with basic competencies within communication, collaboration, independence, self-discipline and customer management.

I am very organized and structured as a person, I am curious as a person and am often referred to as the questioner of the class, because in my world there is no such thing as a decidedly "stupid" question. I adapt to new jobs and socially I get along well with colleagues, friends, and family. I also adapt quickly to knowledge and am good at passing on the knowledge I already have, moreover, I am results-oriented and work purposefully to get the task solved.

In my work, I value good collaboration highly. I am good at listening and good at understanding the needs and views of others. This, combined with my communication skills, makes me good at working with very different people.

As previously mentioned, I am organized, but also creative, which often means that I therefore often contribute with a slightly different and skewed approach to things. I am often put on as being positive, humorous, and outgoing and these are qualities I value to have with me in my work day as well as everyday life.

2019 ▶

Discipline, duties, meeting stability, performance were some of the things I have taken with me from my time in the military. A tough but gracious time in hindsight. This has been 4 months, which has been the 4 months in my life where I have developed the most. This is both in the form of social, but also to a huge degree in being able to collaborate with others, and especially including 'extreme' conditions where we had neither food nor sleep. Furthermore, it has been a time that has shown me that you can do much more than you think. A funny quote I have taken from there is as follows; "You can do twice as much as you think, and 10 times as much as your mother thinks".
